Preface

The Chambers Dictionary is one of a select band of books that enjoys a devoted following and is known instantly whenever its name is mentioned. In earlier versions and under different titles, it is one of the oldest established single-volume dictionaries of its kind, designed for use in the home, office, school, or college, or wherever information is needed about all aspects of the meaning and use of words by those who want a dictionary that is stimulating and entertaining as well as informative and authoritative. In all fields of human thought and activity, it has become indispensable.

In this new edition, we have retained the book's overall approach to the description of language, which avoids dispersing the vocabulary and keeps together words that belong together, emphasizing links in language. To have followed the fashion of reorganizing the information in multiple articles would have destroyed these links and would have entailed either reducing the vocabulary (unthinkable) or producing an even bigger book (impractical), or indeed both (disastrous). In the interests of clarity, however, we have promoted to main-entry status any words that sit uncomfortably within other entries (as will be seen for example at heritage, monitor, recreation and stationary). Those many users who have enjoyed the uniquely witty definitions of Chambers (eg éclair: 'a cake, long in shape but short in duration') will be pleased to find that we have added some more.

New editions of dictionaries are benchmarks of language change, and users will find a great deal that is new in this edition. The world has moved on since the appearance of the previous edition, and the language has moved with it. In the UK we have had privatization of industry, a change of government, rapid advances in political devolution, and a national lottery; internationally we have seen the development of the European Community into a Union, huge advances in technology (notably in the information sciences and human genetics), social advances in the position of women, increased and diversified opportunities for leisure activities, an intensified awareness of the importance of the environment and the dangers that threaten it, significant developments in forms of alternative medicine and technology, and the approach of a new millennium.

All these phenomena are reflected in the many new words and meanings that we have added in this edition: alpha decay, alternative fuel, birthing pool, Britpop, browser, chemisorption, chill-out, Citizen's Charter, corporate bond, cybercafé, dataglove, demutualize, double rollover, drive-by (crime), edutainment, energetic herbalism, euro, Eurobabble, fantasy football, gay gene, gesture politics, girl power, hardbag (music), home cinema, hospital trust, hypermedia, lymphatic drainage, mellowspeak, millennium bug, mouse potato, nanny state, object-oriented database, ozone-depleter, pay-per-view, reiki, road rage, single currency, sleaze, spazz out, swipe card, touchy-feely, zydeco, and many others. Some of these will in all probability be known to readers; but most will either be unknown or require explanation.

One of the key associations of The Chambers Dictionary is with crossword puzzles and word games, where it is recognized as offering an especially wide range of vocabulary that is likely to meet the considerable demands that these pursuits impose on a dictionary. It is the official reference source for the board-game Scrabble®, and is regularly used by crossword compilers as well as solvers. More generally, it is famous for explaining words of the past in addition to words of the present. Its many admirers seek in it the rich range of information on literary and technical words of a kind that are often left out of dictionaries on grounds of currency; here will be found the language of Shakespeare and Spenser and of the Bible and Burns and Scott, many local and dialect words, and words in other varieties of English, alongside the latest terminology of the age of the microprocessor.

We are well aware that users of The Chambers Dictionary have special expectations for which they fail to find satisfaction in its rivals. We trust that this new edition will continue to serve these needs into a new millennium.

A short history of English

Introduction

English is now used as a first language by about 700 million speakers, and is a second language for many millions more. It appears in many guises, ranging from the new Englishes of Africa and Asia, eg Indian English, through the usages of North America to the oldest established varieties (the English of England, Hiberno-English and Scots in Lowland Scotland). English is now a world language, the most widespread in linguistic function and geographical extent that the world has ever seen.

The modern varieties of English have emerged over the last five or six centuries through contact with other languages and through dynamic interaction with each other. All, however, derive from one ultimate source: the Germanic language-variety which was brought to Britain from northern Germany by Anglo-Saxon invaders in the fifth century AD The people who spoke this variety supplanted the Romano-British inhabitants, who gradually retreated to the northern and western parts of the island where, in North Wales and the Gaelic-speaking areas of Scotland, they remain. The invaders' language subsequently became a distinct language, English, which developed and spread within the British Isles up to the sixteenth century. English was subsequently taken beyond these islands with the imperial expansions of the seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth centuries.

During these centuries the structure of the English language changed radically. Our evidence for these changes comes, of course, not from the direct analysis of speech – for sound-recordings of English only began to be made at the end of the nineteenth century – but from comparative study of other languages and through the painstaking analysis by scholars of the written records which have come down to us continuously from the seventh century onwards.

A Germanic language

All Germanic languages derive from a common ancestor known as Proto-Germanic. English is a member of the Western branch of the Germanic languages, which also includes German, Dutch, Afrikaans, and (its closest Germanic relative) Frisian, this last being a language-variety spoken in what is now part of the Netherlands. Other branches of Germanic which are traditionally identified include North Germanic (Danish, Norwegian, Swedish, Faroese, Icelandic) and East Germanic (now extinct, and recorded for the most part in the fourth-century Gothic Bible-translation of Bishop Ulfilas).

The Germanic languages are themselves part of a much larger language-family: the Indo-European group, which includes such diverse languages as Bengali and Brythonic, Russian and Romany, Sanskrit and Spanish. This group stems ultimately from Proto-Indo-European, which was probably originally spoken in what is now Southern Russia.

English shares a number of characteristics with its Germanic relations. Probably the best-known of these is the Germanic modification of inherited consonantal sounds known as Grimm's Law, so-called after the philologist and folklorist J. Grimm (1785–1863). Grimm showed that there was a regular set of consonantal differences between the Germanic languages and the others of the Indo-European family, which dated from the period of divergence of Proto-Germanic from the other Indo-European varieties. The effects of Grimm's Law in Old English can be seen through comparing groups of cognates, ie words in different languages with a common ancestor (cf Latin co + gnātus 'born together'). Thus, for instance, p in other Indo-European languages corresponds to f/v in Germanic languages, eg. father (German Vater, but Latin pater, French père, Italian padre, Sanskrit pitar-), foot (Dutch voet, but Latin pes, ped-, French pied, Sanskrit padàm 'footstep') etc.

The discovery of such shared linguistic features has made it possible to reconstruct the relationships of the languages which derive from Proto-Indo-European. However, it is worth remembering that, just as children derive some of their linguistic behaviour from their parents but are also strongly influenced by their peer group, so language-varieties borrow usages from those language-varieties with which they come into contact and transmit these acquired characteristics to future generations. Indeed, without such contacts the processes of linguistic change would have been much slower in operation: such a pattern is observable in languages which have little contact with others (for instance Icelandic, which has been an isolated language for much of the last thousand years, has barely changed during this period). The history of English is not one of internal evolution, hermetically sealed from outside influence. Rather, its history is one of constant and dynamic interaction between inherited usage and the languages with which it came into contact.

It is traditional to distinguish between external history, ie the changing functions of varieties of the vernacular in relation to other languages and to broader developments in society, and internal history, ie the changing forms of the language. This distinction is adopted here.

External history

The earliest forms of English were very different from those in present-day use, and the modern configuration has taken many centuries to emerge. The history of English is traditionally divided into a sequence of epochs distinguished by certain language-external events and characterized by language-internal differences.

The following broad periods are generally recognized, although there is a good deal of scholarly debate about the precise boundaries between them.

Prehistoric Old English ('pre-Old English'): the period before written records, roughly 450–650/700 AD. During this period English diverged from the other members of the Germanic group to become a distinct language.

Old English, often referred to as Anglo-Saxon after the Germanic tribes who used it: the period from the appearance of written records in English to the Norman Conquest of 1066. During this period, English was used nationally for the documentary purposes of Anglo-Saxon government. It also had a literary function: the epic poem Beowulf was copied in a manuscript dating from circa 1000, and the end of the period saw the emergence of a formidable native prose tradition with the composition of the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle and the religious homilies of Aelfric and Wulfstan. Most Old English which has come down to us is written in the West-Saxon dialect, since the national focus of power for much of the period lay in the south-western kingdom of Wessex. However, the Old English written record provides evidence for at least three other dialect-groupings: Old Mercian in the Midlands, Old Northumbrian in Northern England and in what later became Lowland Scotland to the south of the Clyde-Forth line, and Kentish in South-East England.

Towards the end of the Anglo-Saxon period, large numbers of North Germanic (Scandinavian) peoples settled in northern England. Their language, in part because it seems to have been to a degree mutually intelligible with local varieties of Old English, had a profound effect on the subsequent history of English beyond the area of primary Scandinavian settlement. However, Scandinavian left little mark on the written record until after the Norman Conquest of 1066.

Middle English: the period from the Norman Conquest to the arrival of printing in Britain in 1476. The Conquest saw the large-scale replacement of the old Anglo-Saxon aristocracy with a French-speaking and European-centred élite. Although English remained in widespread use in speech, it lost in national status; documentary functions were taken over by Latin, which was undergoing a revival in Western Europe, while many literary functions were taken over by varieties of French. The French-speaking élite seems to have shifted quite quickly to the regular use of English in speech, but French remained in prestigious use until at least the end of the fourteenth century. Written English, for much of the Middle Ages, was of solely local significance, primarily used for initial education and for the production of texts with a local readership; it was thus strongly marked by dialectal variation in writing. This situation changed towards the end of the period. Geoffrey Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, written for an aristocratic and metropolitan audience c. 1390–1400, marks one stage in the emergence of the vernacular as having a national significance, as does the translation of the Bible into English associated with the proto-Protestant Wycliffite movement at the end of the fourteenth century.

Towards the end of the Middle English period, distinct varieties of the language emerged outside England: Older Scots in Lowland Scotland, and Hiberno-English in eastern Ireland.

Early Modern English: the period from 1476 to the early eighteenth century. Caxton's introduction of printing to England at the end of the fifteenth century coincided with the elaboration of English as a vernacular capable of being used for all linguistic functions. The role of English was given impetus by the Protestant Reformation, which placed a religious duty of literacy on all, and provided national texts for the purpose: the vernacular Bible and Prayer-Book. This national role coincided with the standardization of written English and with the emergence during the sixteenth century of a prestigious form of pronunciation. Evolving class-structures in society, notably the rise of a powerful London bourgeoisie, provided audiences for sophisticated vernacular texts, such as the dramas of Elizabethan and Jacobean England, and the prestige of the vernacular was reinforced by the victories of the rising middle classes in the mid-seventeenth-century Civil Wars.

The foundation of the modern British state following the Act of Union between England, Wales and Scotland (1707) may be taken as an external marker of the end of the Early Modern period. Older Scots continued to be used up to this date, although it underwent severe competition from the forces of Anglicization, particularly in religious discourse. During this period, new varieties of English/Scots appeared in overseas settlements such as the Plantations in Ulster from the end of the sixteenth century, and in the British Colonies in North America.

Later Modern English: the period from the early eighteenth century to the present-day. Tendencies already prefigured in earlier centuries, such as the development of mass literacy and of urban varieties, came to fruition during this period. It is the also the period when overt pride in English was most clearly signalled, notably with the arrival of large-scale codifications of the language such as Samuel Johnson's Dictionary of 1755. Above all, the defining linguistic characteristic of this period is the spread of English beyond its place of origin, to the various parts of the Empire and later, with the cultural hegemony of the United States, to the new electronic media.

After 1707 Older Scots developed into Modern Scots, but became much more restricted in register, to non-prestigious speech and to specialized usages, eg in the verse of Robert Burns. Subsequent attempts to reinstate Scots as a national, ie Scottish, vernacular rather than as a collection of local varieties have met so far with mixed success. Other varieties within the English-language continuum have emerged as elaborated usages in their own right, eg Indian English, where a special variety with its own distinctive grammatical, lexical and accentual properties has emerged as a national prestigious usage.

Internal history

The developments in the social function of English described above all left their mark on the internal evolution of the language, at every level: in pronunciation and spelling, in grammar and in vocabulary.

Towards the end of the Old English period, spelling became standardized on the basis of West Saxon, for reasons already given; but during the Middle English period it became usual for dialectal variation to be manifested in spelling. There are therefore, for instance, no fewer than 500 ways of spelling the simple word 'through' in Middle English, ranging from fairly recognizable thurgh, thorough and þorowe to exotic-seeming drowȝ, yhurght, trghug and trowffe. As long as English was used simply on a local basis this practice was comparatively unproblematic, since the phonic conventions of each locality could be accepted comparatively easily within that locality as an appropriate reflexion of pronunciation. However, the inconvenience of not having a national system became much more apparent when English started to take on national functions once again. By the beginning of the fifteenth century, the usage developed in London was starting to take on a national role, and London spelling of this period is in its essentials the basis of the present-day English pattern. During the sixteenth century, a parallel standardized Scottish system competed for a while with London spelling in Scotland, and a slightly modified form of the system appeared in the United States at the end of the eighteenth century (thus distinctions of the coloured-colored type) and has been subsequently sustained there and elsewhere.

The reconstruction of pronunciation during the Old and Middle English periods is based upon a mixture of evidence of greater or lesser value: the interpretation of spellings, the analysis of rhyming practice in verse, comparison with other languages and with later states of the language. The major development in the history of English is a phenomenon called the Great Vowel Shift, which affected the 'long vowels' of later Middle English. This sound-change, which probably arose in London as a result of complex processes of social interaction, may be dated to the period between 1400 and 1600 by the evidence of words coming into the language. Thus doubt and guile, French words which entered the language before 1400, were subjected to the diphthongization-processes of the Shift, while soup and tureen, later adoptions, were not so subjected.

The evidence for a standard form of pronunciation is uncertain until the sixteenth century. In 1589, George Puttenham, in The Arte of English Poesie, advises the accomplished poet to adopt the accentual usage of 'the better brought vp sort':

> 'ye shall therfore take the vsuall speach of the Court, and that of London and the shires lying about London within lx. myles, and not much aboue.'

The history of standard pronunciation is a complex matter, and the evolution of present-day prestigious accents is a matter of quite complex interaction between varieties rather than a simple proccss of descent. However, broadly speaking, Puttenham's description still holds for England at least, although other prestigious accents are found widely throughout the English-speaking world. Thus the accent-component of Scottish Standard English is prestigious in Scotland, and the variety known as General American is prestigious in the United States.

In grammar, the major change between Old and Present-Day English is the shift from synthesis to analysis in expressing grammatical relations. Whereas the relationships within and between phrases in Present-Day English are largely expressed by word-order, in Old English, these relationships are expressed to a much greater extent by special endings attached to words. These endings are called inflexions.

The Old English inflexional system means that Old English word-order can be much more flexible than that of its descendant. Thus, in Present-Day English

1. The lord binds the servant.

and

2. The servant binds the lord.

mean very different things. The word-order indicates the relative functions of the phrases 'the lord' and 'the servant'. This was not necessarily the case in Old English. Sentence 1. above can be translated into Old English as

3. Se hlāford bint þone cnapan.

However, it could also be translated as

4. Þone cnapan bint se hlāford.

5. Se hlāford þone cnapan bint.

and so on. In sentences 3. – 5. above, the phrase se hlāford, because it is in the so-called nominative case, with a nominative form of the definite article the (se) is always the subject of the clause in whatever position it appears. And, because it is in the so-called accusative case, with an accusative form of the definite article (þone) and an accusative inflexion on the accompanying noun (-an), þone cnapan is always the direct object of the clause. The cases, not the word-order, here determine the relationship between the two phrases. There were conventions in Old English that placed the subject in initial position, but these conventions could easily be departed from for stylistic effect.

This system did not survive intact into the Middle English period; it appears that interaction with Scandinavian encouraged the loss of inflexions, and the conventions of word-order, whereby subject/object positioning had become stylistically formalized, became more fixed to take over the task originally performed by inflexions. The Present-Day English pattern resulted. However, it is wrong to describe Present-Day English as wholly uninflected: a few inflexions remain in Present-Day English, even if we do not call them such (cf Tom, Tom's, pig, pig's, pigs etc).

Perhaps most obviously, there have been changes in the lexicon between Old and Present-Day English, and these changes reflect the kinds of linguistic contacts which the language has undergone. Although much of the core vocabulary of English is derived from Old English – eg hand, head, wife, child, stone, name, man, fish, ride, choose, bind, love etc – the lexicon in general has been greatly augmented by borrowings from other languages.

Scandinavian has affected some of the most basic features of the language, such as the pronoun system – they, their and them are all from Scandinavian – and the system of grammatical inflexion, eg the -s endings on some parts of the verb-paradigm in loves etc.

Further, some items of core vocabulary are Scandinavian in origin, eg take, ill, egg, skin. More subtly, cognate items in Scandinavian and English have developed distinct meanings, eg skirt, shirt, and many Scandinavian words are found only in some varieties, eg kirk.

French has had a massive effect on the range of lexical items available in the language. To exemplify from the noun alone: words such as action, bucket, calendar, courtesy, damage, envy, face, grief, honour, joy, labour, marriage, noise, opinion, people, quality, rage, reason, sound, spirit, task, use, vision, waste, all of which are common in Present-Day usage, are all derived from French. Many French words are found in high-register contexts, and this means that their meanings in English diverge from those in French, eg commence, which has high-register connotations in English which are not shared by the French original commencer.

Of course, numerous other languages have had an effect on English, reflecting various cultural and imperial developments. Latin learning, sometimes mediated through French, has given English words such as arbiter, pollen, junior, vertigo, folio etc. Contact with the world beyond Western Europe has given most of the European languages such words as harem (Arabic), steppe (Russian), taboo (Tongan), chocolate (Nahuatl), but it seems likely that imperial expansion in India gave English such items as thug, pyjama, gymkhana, mulligatawny.

The hospitality of English to foreign words has often been commented on; indeed, borrowing is the characteristic method whereby English expands its vocabulary, something which marks English off from its near-relatives such as German. Old English, like modern German, created new words through compounds, eg sciprāp 'cable' (lit. 'ship-rope'); cf German Fernseher 'television' (lit. 'far-seer'). However, this is no longer a marked feature of Present-Day English. One reason for this change must be to do with the grammatical structure of the later forms of English: there is no need to fit borrowed items into a complex inflexional system. Another reason is probably to do with custom: the more English borrowed, the more borrowing became customary; the more borrowing became customary, the more English borrowed.

Examples of Earlier English

The Lord's Prayer in Old, Middle and Early Modern English, and in Older Scots

Old English (West Saxon, late ninth century)

Þū ūre fæder, þe eart on heofonum, sīe þīn nama gehālgod. Cume þīn rīce. Sīe þīn wylla on eorþan swā swā on heofonum. Syle ūs tōdæg ūrne dæghwāmlican hlāf. And forgief ūs ūre gyltas swā swā wē forgiefaþ þǣm þe wiþ ūs āgyltaþ. And ne lǣd þū nā ūs on costnunge. ac ālīes ūs fram yfele.

Middle English (Kentish, 1340)

Vader oure þet art ine heuenes, yhalȝed by þin name. Cominde þi riche. Yworþe þi wil ase ine heuene and ine erþe. Bread oure echedayes yef ous today. And uorlet ous oure yeldinges ase and we uorleteþ oure yelderes. And ne ous led naȝt into uondinge, ac vri ous uram queade.

Middle English (Central Midlands, c. 1380)

Oure fadir, þat art in heuenys, halewid be þi name. Þi kyngdom come to. Be þi wile don ase in heuene and in erþe. Ȝiue to us þis day oure breed ouer oþer substaunse. And forȝiue to us oure dettes, as and we forȝiuen to oure dettouris. And leede us not into temptaciouns, but delyuere us from yuel.

Older Scots (c. 1520)

Our fader, that art in heuenis, hallewit be thi name. Thi kingdom cum to. Thi wil be done in erde as in heuen. Gefe to vs this day our breid ouer vthir substaunce. And forgif to vs our dettis, as we forgef to our dettouris. And leid vs nocht into temptacioun, bot deliuer vs fra euile.

Early Modern English (Book of Common Prayer, 1549)

Our Father, which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy Name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, As we forgive them that trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation; But deliver us from evil.

Variation and change

Variety's the very spice of life,
That gives it all its flavour

These lines by the 18th-century poet William Cowper[1] could be the theme song of The Chambers Dictionary. It is a word-lover's treasure-trove, from which users can build up a hoard of gems for future usage. You could win at Scrabble (it is the official Scrabble Dictionary), by, say, discovering it is possible to attach the letter a to good to make the word agood 'in good earnest, heartily' (a Shakesperian usage). You can liven up your conversation with lesser known lexical items: 'Look at that catling' ('kitten'). You can remonstrate gently with someone misbehaving: 'What a birkie!' ('a strutting or swaggering fellow'). And you can show off your medical and scientific terminology by casually including in your conversation words newly included in this latest edition, such as acetylcholinesterase ('an enzyme that breaks down acetylcholine, thought to be a factor in Alzheimer's disease').

But it would be a mistake to treat this dictionary simply as a collection of fascinating bric-à-brac. Hopefully, it will act as a lure to knowledge about language, by leading people with an interest in words to a greater awareness of the varieties within English, and in the long run, towards a deeper understanding of language.

Such a pilgrim's progress has more than one stage. A useful first step is the peeling away of common misunderstandings about variation and change. The second is learning about the causes of variation, and how current varieties interact.

Some false beliefs have been circulating for centuries. In the eighteenth century, an admiration for Latin with its apparently fixed grammar led to a desire to solidify English. Jonathan Swift, for example, wrote a famous letter to the Lord Treasurer in 1712, proposing the formation of an academy to regulate language usage[2].

In the nineteenth century, two opposing opinions were found. According to one view, English was superior to other tongues which had not yet reached the same advanced level of development[3]. According to another, all languages were created equal by God, but some had slithered down from their former excellence: 'What does their language on close inspection prove? In every case what they are themselves, the remnant and ruin of a better and a nobler past', claimed an influential archbishop[4], as he castigated an African language for apparently losing its word for 'supreme Divine Being'.

This second view was more pernicious, because it fostered a false 'for want of a nail' belief, that language was largely a static system which had to be maintained with care. Otherwise, it was assumed, loss of a nail would lead to loss of a horse-shoe, then a horse, then a rider, and so on. Fears were expressed that English, like Latin, might disintegrate into 'congeries of mutually unintelligible dialects'. Typical of these emotive outcries was an article with the title: 'Can the English tongue be preserved?' (1897)[5]. The writer advised vigilance: 'For never since Babel have two dialects become mutually incomprehensible at a stroke; the change creeps upon them unawares; and once attained, it is irrevocable'. Change was generally assumed to be a stealthy and destructive process, which took hold by degrees, like a tadpole changing into a frog. Such worries tied in with a nineteenth century obsession with etiquette, when a 'correct' way to eat or speak was presumed to exist. Twentieth century speakers have inherited these old fears, which are sometimes voiced in letters to newspapers: 'Oh, please English-lovers everywhere, do your bit for the language. Let's stop this slide down the slippery slope' urged one recent worrier[6].

But halfway through the twentieth century, a breakthrough in understanding took place. Language, it was demonstrated, changes not by a tadpole-to-frog process, but via competition. A variant form, which may have existed for a long time, expands and competes with an older one. The old and the new co-exist for a time. Eventually, the newcomer might push the older form aside, like a young cuckoo, which gradually expands and pushes an existing inhabitant out of the nest. This new viewpoint arose via the work of the American William Labov, who used sociolinguistic surveys to chart the progress of changes[7].

But even the young cuckoo idea is oversimple. A 'multiple births' model may be more realistic. Numerous variants are often in competition, in use in different styles and areas. In the long run, one of these is likely to win out over the others. In the case of individual words, the winners are often due to chance. But the sounds and syntax (word patterns) can only move in ways which fit in with the existing patterns of the language. Language is self-regulating: it maintains its patterned nature, however much it changes in its details.

In recent years, therefore, language variety has become increasingly understood. Geographical, social, stylistic and personal variation can be teased out, and their interaction explored. Linguistic corpora (chunks of linguistic material on computers) and statistics for analysing these have become available, as well as the results of numerous sociolinguistic surveys. Geographical diversity is the most obvious. Scots and Londoners have their own types of English – though the accent (pronunciation) varies more than the grammar: people from different regions within the British Isles are often speaking the same dialect, though with varying accents.

Within any one area, social variation reflects differences in class, sex, age or ethnic origin. Socially, upper middle class speech often has overt prestige: parents want their children to speak 'properly' and encourage 'educated' speaking styles. But these days, formality is often less important than sociability. Formal speech is sometimes regarded as pompous, and lower class speech may have covert prestige. Casual, colloquial styles tend to sound friendly and 'with it' – though teenagers often exaggerate this partly to annoy their parents, and partly because they are in the process of forming their own social groups, which have their own private words. In the long run, teenagers move in two directions: the language of the majority becomes less extreme, but future 'drop-outs' maintain their non-standard speech.

Yet the increasing informality of English is not purely 'modern sloppiness' as is sometimes claimed. Partly, it is due to increasing literacy, and a greater availability of printed material. In the last century, printing processes were slower, and relatively few books and newspapers were published, compared with nowadays. As more became obtainable, competition between them increased. Some went down-market in content, but all gradually became more readable and user-friendly. Newspapers and novels today often blur the distinction between written and spoken styles. In any one newspaper, all levels of formality are likely to be found. An article on mental health might discuss patients who exhibit bizarre behaviour or are mentally challenged: such 'politically correct' terms are typical of formal speech and writing. The financial pages might ask whether markets have gone bonkers, a feature writer might claim to be going bananas through overwork, and a letter writer could suggest that some government officials are 'two sandwiches short of a picnic'. Ideally, any competent speaker of the language will be able to adjust his or her speech to suit the occcasion, to select the variant appropriate to the style or topic.

But where does so-called 'standard English' fit into all this, the type of English that is supposedly taught in schools? Here, the word standard causes problems, because it has more than one meaning. For some, it is 'an established or accepted model', for others, it is 'a definite level of excellence'. The first definition is the one which applies best to so-called 'standard English'. It refers to written English, rather than spoken, as noted by Henry Wyld in 1909: 'The Grammar of Standard English is practically fixed and uniform, so that among educated speakers, no matter how they may differ in other respects, Pronunciation, Vocabulary and Idiom, they will generally agree in using the same grammatical forms'[8]. What he said then is still valid today.

Of course, some parts of written English grammar are in the process of change. Minor alterations often cause a disproportionate amount of alarm, such as the increasing use of the word media as singular, rather than plural. Most plurals end in -s, so such changes could be regarded as a useful tidying up process. Fluctuation between 'the media is' and 'the media are' is a sign that change is underway (as noted above). Hopefully, future generations will view such changes with interest, rather than dismay.

But can change actually cause confusion? Yes, occasionally. Disinterested ('impartial') is now quite often used to mean 'uninterested, bored'. Alert speakers are aware of potential difficulties, and will avoid problem words. But this leads us back to the need for dictionaries, which chart the multiple meanings of existing lexical items, and may provide suggestions for alternatives.

A character in a novel remembers 'the lush spring excitement of language in childhood... There was no end to it, apparently – it was like the grains of sand on the shore... "Does anyone know all the words in the world?" I ask mother' (Penelope Lively, Moon tiger[9]). Well, no, nobody knows all the words in the world, not even all the words of English. But a dictionary, such as the present one, can be a great help in sorting out these multiple grains of sand.

American English

There are many differences between the forms of English spoken and written in Britain and America. Some of these are shown below.

Spelling

Spelling differences in a number of individual words (eg manoeuvre/maneuver, defence/defense, practise/practice) are noted in the dictionary. Some differences involving groups of similar words are as follows:

Br	US
-ogue	-og	American English simplifies words such as catalogue and pedagogue to catalog and pedagog.
-our	-or	American English has -or in words such as color and humor. Glamour and saviour, however, are generally written -our.
-re	-er	Eg center, meter, theater. But to show the hard sound of c or g: acre, massacre, ogre, etc; however, meager not meagre.
ll	l	In inflections and derivatives of words ending in l not immediately preceded by a single stressed vowel, American English does not double the l (cf p xxiv): canceled, counselor, disheveled, equaled, marvelous, traveler, etc. (Note also woolen.)
pp	p	Similarly, kidnaper, worshiping, etc.
tt	t	And also carburetor (but eg formatting).
l	ll	Eg enroll, fulfill, instill, skillful and willful.
ae, oe or e	e	The tendency to replace ae and oe by e in words derived from Latin and Greek is more strongly developed in the US than in Britain, eg esophagus, hemoglobin.
-ize or -ise	-ize	In verbs that may be spelt -ize or -ise, the use of -ize is now standard in American English. Note also analyze, paralyze, etc.

As a rule, hyphens are used less frequently in American English than in British English: eg dining room rather than dining-room, bitterroot rather than bitter-root.

Pronunciation

Generally speaking American pronunciation differs from British English as follows:

Br	US
ä	In many words, eg ask, dance, half and rather, American English has a shorter, more front vowel than that of standard British English.
i	Where British English has i in final position in words such as happy and city, American English has ē.
ö	An alternative pronunciation ä is common in words such as haunt, launch, saunter, taunt and vaunt.
o	In American English, words such as block, got, pond, probable and top are pronounced with an ä sound. In words in which the vowel is followed by f, s, th, r, g or ng, eg coffee, dog, cross, forest and long, a longer vowel similar to ö is also common.
ū	After the sounds t, d, n, l and s, American English has o͞o rather than ū, eg in new and tune.
īl	In most words ending in -ile, such as agile, fertile, fragile and hostile, American English pronounces the final syllable as -il rather than -īl.
t	In words such as latter, metal and writing, the -tt-/-t- is pronounced with the same sound as that of the -dd-/-d- in ladder, medal and riding.
r	In most accents of American English r is pronounced at the end of a word and before a consonant.

There are a number of differences between the American pronunciation of vowels followed by r and the British pronunciation of the corresponding vowels:

Br	US
a	Some Americans tend to make a sound approaching e, so that, for example, marry approximates to merry.
ā	This is commonly pronounced as a diphthong before r, the first element of which is close to a lengthened e. The second element of the diphthong, ə, is sometimes not pronounced when the vowel occurs in initial or medial position; eg the usual pronunciation of Maryland is mer'i-lənd.
är spelt -er-	In words such as clerk and Derby, where British speech preserves an older pronunciation är, American speech has ûr.
-ə-ri	American English tends to give greater prominence than British English does to the suffixes -ary and -ory, and often also -ery; for example, monetary (Br -tə-ri or -tri, US -te-ri), confectionery (Br -nə-ri, US -ne-ri) and obligatory (Br -tə-ri or -tri, US -tö-ri)

In addition to the above, many differences between American and British English pronunciation are noted in the entries for particular words and prefixes in the dictionary. See for example anti-, schedule, simultaneous and tomato.

Vocabulary

Many differences between British and American usage with regard to vocabulary and meaning are noted in the dictionary, eg bonnet/hood, coffin/casket, curtains/drapes, estate agent/realtor, homely, motorway/expressway, pavement/sidewalk, sweets/candy and windscreen/windshield.

Some other varieties of English

British and American English are only two of the varieties of English which exist in the world today. Other forms exist elsewhere, notably in Canada, South Africa, India and Pakistan, Australia and New Zealand. Many words or meanings of words unique to these regional forms are noted in the dictionary, eg baas, billabong, coloured, hartal, joey. Some guidance on pronunciation and spelling is given in the following notes.

Canadian English

In spelling, Canadian usage stands midway between American English and British English. The usage is however far from uniform and varies from province to province and even from person to person. Hence spellings such as color, traveler and center, and colour, traveller and centre, are to be found alongside each other.

In pronunciation, Canadian English exhibits features found in both American and British English although it more commonly follows American English, eg speakers of Canadian English pronounce tomato with an ā.

Br	Can
r	Like American English, Canadian English pronounces r in word-final position and before a consonant.
t	In the pronunciation of many Canadians, words such as matter and madder rhyme, as in American English.
i	The sound heard in squirrel, etc approaches ü
-īl	Of the words which end in -īl in British English, some, eg docile, textile, fragile, end in -īl as in British English, while others such as missile and fertile end in -il as in American English.
ī, ow	In Canadian English, the vowels in eg loud and ride do not rhyme with those of lout and write.

English in Australia and New Zealand

Although there are differences between the English of Australia and that of New Zealand, the two varieties are sufficiently similar to be treated together. Vocabulary that is peculiar to this region includes names of local flora and fauna (bower-bird, galah, wallaby); words to do with local topography and everyday life, some imported in extended use into British English (black stump, bush, outback, walkabout); general words that do not exist in British English in the same meaning (bather = 'bathing costume', king-hit = 'knockout blow'); and many colourful colloquialisms and idioms (beaut, bludge, crook, dinkum, she's apple).

The spelling of Australian and New Zealand English traditionally follows that of British English but American spelling is now sometimes also found.

Features of pronunciation that can be noted are:

Br	Austr, NZ
r	As in British English, r is not pronounced before a consonant or at the end of a word, except by speakers in the southern part of the South Island of New Zealand.
i	Australian and New Zealand English have ē in words such as happy and very, where British English has i. In closed unstressed syllables, where British English has i, Australian and New Zealand English have ə, as for example in mistake, defeat, ticket, etc.
o͝or	The pronunciation o͝oə of words like sure, pure, etc has been almost entirely superseded by either ö or o͝oə.
ā	In many words in which British English has ä, Australian and New Zealand English have a. In words ending in -ance, New Zealand English has ä where Australian English has a or ä. In Australian English lather is pronounced with a, but in New Zealand with ä.
ō	Before l, this is usu pronounced as o.

English in South Africa

In the 19th century, varieties of English were developed by the Dutch (influenced by Afrikaans), by the black population (influenced by local African languages) and by Indian immigrants who arrived in the country in the second half of the century. English has been an official language of South Africa since 1910; the other official language is Afrikaans, which replaced Dutch in 1925. This century, during and after the apartheid era, Afrikaans has been spoken by the white population and has been regarded as the language of authority and government, whereas English, although a minority language, has been spoken by many Blacks, both as a language of political protest and as a means of attaining an international voice.

The English of South Africa is therefore not a homogeneous variety, and the influences on it have been diverse. Many of the loan words from Afrikaans and African languages relate to local flora and fauna and other aspects of everyday life (some imported into British English): aardvark (an animal), baas (master), backveld (remote country), dikkop (a type of bird), donga (Zulu; gully), fundi (Nguni; an expert), induna (Zulu; a tribal leader), jukskei (an outdoor game), koppie (a low hill), mossie (a type of bird), poort (a mountain pass), sjambok (a whip), snoek (a fish), and springbok (an animal). A number of terms have permeated world consciousness for historical reasons, notably apartheid, commando, trek, and veld. Words of English derivation include pig-lily (a kind of local lily) and square-face (gin), and words of mixed origin include kingklip (a fish). In other cases, words known in British English have special meanings in South African English, eg bioscope (a cinema), camp (a fenced-off area of pasture), canteen (a public house), homeland (an area reserved for Black Africans), lay-by (a down payment), robot (a traffic signal), stamp (pounded maize), and township (a black urban settlement).

Apart from relatively few and minor peculiarities of vocabulary, the standard English of South Africa is very similar to that of British English. South African pronunciation of English is characterized by a clipped accent with tight vowel sounds and more strongly articulated consonants p, t, and k. Other features are as follows:

Br	S Africa
r	The S African English treatment of r word-finally and before consonants is the same as that of British English.
i	S African English has ë where British English has i in very, secretary, etc. In other positions, i is pronounced more centrally than in British English, with a vowel close to ə.
a, e, ä etc	There is a tendency to raise these vowels to values approaching e, i, o/ö, etc so giving de'dë for daddy, kit'l for kettle, and so on.
är	This is normally pronounced as a long e or ä sound in words like bear, fair, etc.

English in the Indian Subcontinent

The use of English in the Indian Subcontinent dates from the first British contacts with the region in the 17th century; between then and independence in 1947 English developed into the language of government and education. Today, Hindi is the official language of India, and English has 'associate' status, although it has no such status beside Urdu in Pakistan and Bengali in Bangladesh.

English in India, Pakistan and Bangladesh is normally learned as a second language, and is often greatly influenced by the speaker's first language. Thus no homogeneous Indian English can be described here but only a number of features about which one may make some general remarks.

Two common features of Indian English are the use of retroflex ṭ, ḍ, etc. for British English t, d, etc, and the substitution of p, t, d for f, th, dh. Speakers whose native language is Hindi or Urdu tend to insert an i before the initial consonant clusters in words such as speech, school, because these consonant groups do not occur in initial position in Hindi or Urdu.

Indian English pronounces word-final and pre-consonantal r.

Vowels in unstressed syllables are often pronounced in the way they would be in stressed syllables, where British English has ə or i.

British contact with the peoples and languages of the Indian Subcontinent has resulted in a number of English loan words, including the familiar bungalow (from Hindi), guru (from Hindi), jodhpurs (from a place-name), and pyjamas (from Hindustani). Some English words and expressions are used in special ways: demit means 'to resign' (as in Scottish English) and prepone, meaning 'to bring forward to an earlier date' has a wider currency than it does in British English.

English in South-East Asia

The use of English in SE Asia dates from the end of the 18th century and beginning of the 19th, when the British East India Company established settlements at Penang and Singapore in the country then called Malaya; these two places, together with Malacca, had been formed into the Straits Settlements by 1867. In 1898, Britain bought from China a 99-year lease on the New Territories of Hong Kong, and other territories in the region became British protectorates.

Malaysia became independent in 1957, and the Federation of Malaysia was formed in 1963. Singapore achieved self-government in 1959 and (after a brief period of incorporation in the Federation) full independence in 1965. The principal languages of the area (in addition to English) are Chinese, Tamil and Malay, reflecting the ethnic mix of the populations. Hong Kong was returned to China on expiry of the lease in 1997.

The situation today is that British English is the dominant influence in Singapore, Malaysia, and Hong Kong, while American English is more influential in the Philippines and other areas of the South Pacific, as a legacy of the American acquisition of these territories after the Spanish-American War of 1898. In Singapore, English continued as the language of government, but education was based on a bilingual system of English and one of the three ethnic languages. In Malaysia, Malay (or, more accurately, Bahasa Malaysia) has been the official language since 1957, although more recently English has been actively promoted as a second language.

In the light of these historical facts, it is more realistic to speak of Singaporean English than of Malaysian English, although this is likely to change with time. Some linguists, however, prefer to regard the forms of English used in Singapore and in Malaysia as sub-varieties of a larger distinct variety, which they call Singaporean and Malaysian English (SME). In Singapore, since three-quarters of the population are ethnically Chinese, Mandarin and other Chinese languages are likely to exert a strong influence on the development of Singaporean English.

The vocabulary of English in SE Asia includes a few items that are also familiar in British English, such as lychee, and yin and yang. Then there are words of English origin that are used mainly by Singaporean and Malaysian speakers as a part of their culture or lifestyle, such as airflown (denoting freshly imported food) and red packet (a red envelope containing money, given on ceremonial occasions), and more informal uses (sometimes disparagingly called Singlish) such as to cut ('to overtake') and to zap ('to photocopy'). Other words, such as sarabat (a strong-tasting drink made of ginger and sugar) and silat (the Malay equivalent of kung fu) are not English in origin, and represent concepts for which no other word exists. Finally and (in the context of SE Asian usage) more controversially, there are slang words of non-English origin, such as chim ('profound'), malu ('shameful'), and others that are less easy to translate such as kiasu (roughly, 'afraid to lose out').

Differences in pronunciation of English in SE Asia are largely affected by the influence of the other principal languages of the area, Chinese, Tamil and Malay. The principal features are (1) some consonants (notably p, t, and k) are not aspirated, (2) the last consonant of two at the end of a word (eg lamp, first) will often be silent, (3) there are considerable differences in vowel quality in words such as bid, cot, stuff and pull (in which the vowel tends to be longer) and in the articulation of diphthongs, as in bait, boat, and bare (which tend to be shorter and closer to the first sound of the diphthong).

Rules of English spelling

The most important spelling rules are explained in this article; an understanding of these is assumed for all entries in the dictionary where no inflected form (plural, past tense, etc) is given. Inflected forms are given for words that have inflections with unpredictable spellings (eg tangos and mangoes), inflections with spellings that do not follow the general rules (paid and laid as opposed to played), or inflections that are regular but about which there is often uncertainty (eg monkeys, not 'monkies').

In general, derivatives (eg nouns and adverbs based on adjectives, such as brightness and brightly from bright, or adjectives formed from nouns, such as noisy from noise) are spelt out in full in the dictionary, but since the rules for the formation of such derivatives are much the same as for inflections, they are covered here also.

The rules given here are those that apply in British English. See also p xx for the rules of American spelling, where these differ from the British norm.

The basic rules of inflection and derivation:

(i) Plural nouns are normally formed by adding -s to the singular form:

cat cats
dog dogs
horse horses

(NB There should be no apostrophe before the s in a plural noun; forms like bag's of potato's are commonly seen but are quite wrong. Do's is an exception, though dos is also correct.)

Verbs are generally inflected by adding -s, -ing and -ed to the base form:

follow follows following followed

If a word ends in s, z, x, sh or ch, -es is added rather than -s:

kiss kisses
box boxes
push pushes

However, if the ch is pronounced [k] or [hh], -s alone is added:

stomachs, lochs, psychs

(ii) Comparative and superlative adjectives (and some adverbs) are formed by the addition of -er and -est to the base form:

black blacker blackest

(iii) Derivatives of nouns, verbs and adjectives are generally formed by the simple addition of a suffix to the stem:

sing singer
move movement
red redness
cruel cruelty

Adjectives which end in ic form adverbs in -ally:

economic economically

(The only common exception is publicly.)

Inflection of nouns and verbs ending in o:

(i) Most nouns ending in o add -s to form the plural:

zoo zoos
radio radios
Eskimo Eskimos
albino albinos

A small group of words add -es, eg cargoes, echoes, goes, heroes, potatoes. A number of words, such as banjo, fiasco and halo, may add either -s or -es. These are indicated in the dictionary.

(ii) For the 3rd person singular of the present tense of the verb, the rule for adding -s or -es can be stated in terms of the noun rules:

if the noun takes only -s, or if there is no related noun, add -s:

two radios → she radios

if the noun takes -es in the plural, or may take either -s or -es, add -es to the verb:

two echoes → it echoes

(The only exception to this is do, plural do's or dos, 3rd person singular does.)

Words ending in y:

(i) A noun ending in y preceded by a consonant generally has a plural in -ies:

fly flies
country countries

Proper nouns are an exception (eg the four Marys), as are words in which the final y belongs to the adverbial part of a compound (eg lay-bys, stand-bys).

If the final y is preceded by a vowel, it does not change to ie in the plural:

day days
donkey donkeys

(but see money for the exceptional plural monies)

(ii) The rules for verb inflections are much the same as for nouns. If the y follows a consonant, it changes to ie before -s, but if it follows a vowel, it does not:

cry cries
deny denies

but

stay stays
buy buys

Similarly, in the past tense:

cry cried
deny denied

but

stay stayed enjoy enjoyed

(Said, paid and laid are exceptions.)

(iii) Adjectives ending in y preceded by a consonant generally change the y to i in the comparative and superlative:

happy happier happiest

The only exceptions are a few one-syllable words in which the final y is pronounced [ī]: see the dictionary entries for dry, shy, sly, etc. If the final y is preceded by a vowel, it generally does not change in the comparative and superlative:

grey greyer greyest
coy coyer coyest

However, a number of adjectives ending in ey (mostly ones based on nouns, eg clayey from clay) change the ey to i:

clayey clayier clayiest

(iv) Derivatives follow similar rules as those for inflections, ie a y following a consonant changes to an i before a following suffix (except -ing), whereas one following a vowel does not:

happy happily happiness
merry merriment
deny denier
envy enviable comply compliant

but

coy coyly coyness
employ employment
play player
enjoy enjoyable
buoy buoyant

Words which are exceptions to the inflectional rules tend to be exceptions also to the derivational rules, but the irregularities are not always predictable. See the dictionary entries for dry, shy, sly, etc. (Note also the spelling of busyness, to distinguish it from business.)

Words ending in e:

Before a suffix beginning with a vowel, the final e is generally dropped:

smile smiling smiled smiler
white whiter whitest whiten pale palish
ice icy use usable escape escapism

Before a consonant, the e is retained:

move movement
use useful useless

There are, however, exceptions:

(i) Verbs ending in ee, oe and ye do not drop the e before -ing:

hoe hoeing
dye dyeing

(ii) Verbs ending in ie change the ie to y before -ing:

die dying
tie tying

(iii) A few verbs retain the final e in order to show the correct pronunciation and to be distinguishable from similar words with no e:

sing singing
but singe singeing

swing swinging
but swingeing

(Note also the adjective holey = full of holes, as opposed to holy.)

(iv) Before an -a- or an -o-, the e is retained after a soft c or g:

notice noticing but noticeable
advantage advantageous

(v) Adverbs formed from adjectives ending in le preceded by a consonant simply replace the final e with y:

simple simply
single singly

(vi) Words ending in -dge may correctly retain or drop the final e in derivatives; thus judgment and judgement, abridgment and abridgement are equally correct.

(vii) Common exceptions to all the above rules are argument, awful, daily, duly, eerily, gaily, truly and wholly.

Doubling of a final consonant:

If a word ends in a single consonant which is preceded by a single vowel written with a single letter and the stress of the word is on the final syllable of the word (or if there is only one syllable), the final consonant is doubled before a suffix beginning with a vowel:

drum drumming drummed drummer omit omitting omitted
refer referring referred referral
red redder reddest redden ton tonnage

but

dream dreaming dreamed dreamer profit profiting profited enter entering entered refer reference (note the change in stress)
green greener greenest

A few words double the final consonant contrary to the above rule:

worship worshipping worshipped worshipper

(and also format, handicap, hobnob, humbug, kidnap, leapfrog and zigzag)

A final l preceded by a single-letter vowel generally doubles regardless of the position of the stress, as in signal signalling signalled signaller rebel rebelling rebellion rebellious cancel cancelling cancellation but not before the suffixes -ize/-ise, -ism, -ist and -ity, as in equal equality equalize final finalist

though again there are exceptions, such as medallist, tranquillity and crystallize.

Note also paralleling and paralleled (where one would expect a double ll before the suffix) and woolly and woollen (where one would expect a single l).

A few words allow both single and double consonants: see the dictionary entries for eg benefit, bias, bus, focus, gas, leaflet, plus and yes.

Words ending in c:

When a suffix beginning with a vowel is added, and the consonant still has the hard [k] sound, the c becomes ck:

picnic picnicking picnicked picnicker

Two exceptions are arc and talc:

arcing/arcking, arced/arcked talcing/talcking, talced/talcked

The forms without k are the commoner. No k is added when the final c becomes a soft sound ([sh] or [s]) in the derivative:

magic magicking magicked but magician
electric electricity

-ie- or -ei-?

The rule 'i before e except after c' applies only to words in which the vowel has the long [ē] sound:

believe belief
siege
pier

but

deceive deceit
ceiling

(Common exceptions are seize, weir and weird, scientific words such as protein, caffeine and codeine, and proper names such as Keith, Neil, Sheila, Reid and Madeira.)

If a word is pronounced with the sound [ā], ei is always the correct spelling:

eight heir neighbour reign weight

Characters used in etymologies

A brief guide to the pronunciation of some of the non-English characters which appear most frequently in etymologies is given below. The pronunciations given are necessarily approximate as it is not always possible to convey the exact phonetic values intended by means of respelling symbols or verbal explanations.

Vowels

Symbol	Sound
ā, ē, ī, ū	In etymologies, these are long vowels with the sounds (or approximately the sounds) represented by the respelling symbols a or ä, ā or e, ē, and o͞o respectively.
ō	This represents a long o or ö sound or a monophthongal pronunciation of the respelling character ō.
ȳ	A long ü sound.
ǣ	A long vowel similar in sound to the RP pronunciation of respelling symbol a.
a, e, etc, ă, ĕ, etc	Short vowels corresponding to ā, ē, etc, with values, varying from language to language, similar to those of the corresponding long vowels or those of the short vowels of English; in Romanian, ă has the sound ə.
â, ê, î, ô, û	In some languages, eg Middle High German, these symbols are used for long vowels with the values ä, ā, ē, ō, o͞o respectively; in Romanian, â and î represent a sound midway between ē and o͞o.
ă̈, ō̆	These have the values of respelling symbols e/ă and o/æ respectively.
ĩ, etc	The diacritic [~] is used, as in the respelling, to show nasalization of vowels.

Consonants

Symbol	Sound
ḍ, ṭ, ṇ, ṣ	These are retroflex counterparts of t, d, etc.
ṛ	In Sanskrit, a vowel rather than a consonant; in Hindi, etc, a consonant formed by the tongue moving from a retroflex position to strike against the teeth-ridge.
ḥ	The normal h-sound of English.
ṁ	This marks nasalization of the preceding vowel or the following consonant in Sanskrit.
ñ	A sound similar to ny, as in Spanish cañon.
ṅ	The sound written ng in the respelling and in English orthography.
c	In Sanskrit, etc, a sound midway between k and ch; in Turkish, the sound of j as in judge.
ç	In French, Arabic and Portuguese, this represents the sound s; in Turkish, ch.
č, ć	In Serbo-Croat, č represents the sound ch, and ć represents ty.
ş	In Turkish, the sound sh.
ś	In Sanskrit, etc, a sound similar to sh.
q	In Arabic, a sound similar to k but pronounced slightly farther back in the mouth; in Chinese, a sound like ch; in Gothic, kw.
ğ	This marks a lengthening of the preceding vowel in Turkish.
gg	In Gothic, the sound ng.
	In Russian words, this represents a 'soft sign', marking a y-like palatalization of the preceding consonant; in Chinese words, it is a mark of strong aspiration; in Arabic, Hebrew and Hawaiian, a glottal stop.
	In Arabic and Hebrew, a sound like hh but produced rather deeper in the throat.

Using the dictionary

(see also inside front cover)

Order of entries

All entries are listed alphabetically, each entry having as a basic pattern the following elements:

(1) Headword
(2) Pronunciation
(3) Part of speech label
(4) Definition(s)
(5) Etymology

Within this framework there are often subheads – words that are derived from the headword (derivatives), or compounds or phrases that include the headword or one of its derivatives. This grouping of related words within an entry preserves and explains their etymological 'family' link, while at the same time ensuring that space is used as effectively as possible.

Where, however, such grouping is felt to be less helpful to the user we have separated the words into independent entries, as at graduate and society, showing their relationships to grade and social by means of the etymologies.

Structure

The main elements of an entry are explained in greater detail below:

1. Headword

The word (in bold type) projecting at the head of an entry is referred to as the headword. Headwords are listed in alphabetical order.

Superscript numbers are added to headwords where necessary (see eg cape[1], cape[2]) to indicate homographs (words of identical spelling but of different meaning, origin, etc).

Included in the headword list, in alphabetical order, are cross references, words of which the full entry, or on which further information, is to be found elsewhere in the dictionary. Also included in the alphabetical headword sequence are abbreviation and symbol entries, which follow full-word entries of identical spelling, and which themselves are followed by prefix, suffix and combining form entries (see page xviii).

2. Pronunciation

(see also inside back cover)

A respelling system (detailed on the inside back cover) has been used in this dictionary. It is a method that is intelligible to people who are not familiar with phonetic symbols, and one that allows for more than one interpretation – so that each user of the dictionary may choose a pronunciation in keeping with his or her speech.

A quick guide to some common vowel sounds is given on alternate pages of the dictionary.

Pronunciation guidance (in italic type) follows the headword, and is given elsewhere in an entry in parentheses where helpful. The main, current British pronunciations are given, and also significant US, etc variants if appropriate, but the numerous possible regional variations cannot be covered individually in a dictionary of this size. See pages xx and xxi for details on American English and other varieties.

Guidance on stress patterns in words of more than one syllable is given by the use of the stress mark ('), which follows the syllable that has the main accent, both in respelling and in subheads for which no full or partial respelling is required.

3. Part of speech label

Following the pronunciation at the head of an entry is a label to indicate the headword's part of speech (eg adj for adjective, n for noun). A further part of speech label may follow a set of definitions, to show that the preceding bold word is also used as another type of word (eg gash[1] vt to cut deeply into. — n a deep, open cut).

Part of speech labels are given after all headwords except some foreign phrases, and before each direct derivative word. Compound nouns are not labelled.

Entries for prefix, suffix and combining form items treat all compound subheads as derivative items, with individual part of speech labels.

4. Definition(s)

Definitions in the dictionary entries are ordered and grouped with a view to clarity, ease of comprehension and use. Normally the most common meanings are given first, unless an earlier, perhaps more specific, sense serves to clarify or explain its subsequent use.

Definitions are separated by semicolons.

In abbreviation and symbol entries, definitions are listed alphabetically.

5. Etymology

The etymology is given in square brackets at the end of the entry. If no etymology is shown, this indicates that the origin and history of the headword is unknown or uncertain. A bold word given as an etymology directs the reader to that word entry as the derivation; other etymologies may direct the reader directly to another etymology. A bold prefix given as an etymology indicates that the headword is formed from that prefix plus the remaining word-item; both elements may be found at their separate dictionary entries.

For abbreviations used in etymologies and elsewhere in the dictionary, see pages xxix-xxxi.

6. Subheads

Subheads are bold-print items not listed as separate entries, but listed and explained within an entry. Note the order in which subheads appear in an entry:

(a) Direct derivatives

These are words which are formed by adding a suffix or ending either to the headword or to the root word. They are given, alphabetically, immediately after the various meanings of the headword. Each is given a grammatical (part of speech) label. Their pronunciation basically follows that of the headword, with stress marks placed after the syllable with the main accent. Where necessary, fuller respelling guidance is given in parentheses. If the meaning of a regular, direct derivative is readily deducible, it may be undefined.

(b) Compounds

Compound words (ie those made up of two or more words, the first being the entry headword or one of its derivatives) follow any direct derivatives. They may be hyphenated, one-word or two-word compounds. If the compound's meaning is evident from its two parts, it may be undefined. Where no grammatical label has been given at a compound, it is to be assumed to be a noun. Those compounds which do not begin with the headword or derivative of the headword are listed under the third category, the phrases.

(c) Phrases
Following any direct derivatives and any compound words, all phrasal items relating to the headword are listed alphabetically. These may be phrases, phrasal verbs or idioms, or compounds which do not begin with the headword or any of its derivatives.

7. Alternative forms

Words spelt or formed in more than one way, but sharing the same meaning(s) and use, are shown in the dictionary linked by the word 'or'. Where a number of such alternatives are shown, strict alphabetical order may be waived in order to list the most commonly used form first.

At headwords, alternative forms that have different pronunciations are each followed immediately by their appropriate pronunciation(s). If the pronunciation follows both headword forms, it applies to both forms.

In hyphenated compound words, alternative forms may often be shown only by the alternative element of the compound (eg hunt'ing-box, -lodge or -seat).

8. Hyphenation

The symbol ▪ at the end of a line, as in hunting▪box, denotes a hyphenated compound.

9. Inflections

Inflected words are shown, following a colon, after the definition(s) of a word (if any). Plural forms and verb participles, etc are shown only if they are irregular in formation, or warrant special clarification. Comparative and superlative forms of adjectives are given (again by the same criteria). Current equivalent feminine forms appear alongside the masculine forms, whereas distinctively or less commonly used feminine forms are shown, following a colon, after the definition(s).

10. Classification labels

A label relating to the classification (eg colloq, slang, chem, elec, psychol) of a word or meaning precedes the list of meanings where it applies to all of the meanings given.

Where a label applies to only one definition in a list, it immediately follows that definition.

A label which precedes the part of speech label at the head of an entry applies to all meanings of the word and to its derivatives and their meanings unless or until it is cancelled by a further classification label. This applies also where there is only one sense and one meaning of a word.

Classification labels are shown in italic print.

Foreign words A bracketed abbreviation (eg Fr, Ger) preceding the part of speech label at the head of an entry signifies that the word is still regarded as a foreign word, rather than as a naturalized English word. German nouns have been spelt with a capital letter, as they are in their country of origin.

11. Alternative pronunciations

As for alternative word forms, alternative pronunciations are shown in the dictionary linked by the word 'or', or by a comma in a string of alternatives. The main, current British pronunciations of a word are given, and also significant and commonly-encountered US, Australian, etc variants as applicable.

Alternative pronunciations at a headword are generally given in full. Elsewhere in an entry simply the syllable or syllables of a word which may be pronounced alternatively are given.

In all alternative or partial pronunciations, that part of a word not included in the respelling is to be assumed unchanged from the main pronunciation given earlier in the entry.

12. Prefix, suffix and combining forms

These entries are treated as ordinary word entries except in the respects specified below.

In the respelling given at a prefix or similar headword, often no stress pattern is specified, as it varies according to the words formed with that element.

Entries for prefix, suffix and combining form items (as already noted in 3) show a separate part of speech label at each compound subhead 'nested' within the entry, treating them as derivatives of the headword.

Different senses within these entries are separated by semicolons. Where these senses are used for reference (eg in footers (see 13 below) or etymologies), they have been numbered.

13. Footers

These are lists, in panels at the foot of relevant pages, of words formed by the prefixes anti-, non-, out-, over-, post-, pre-, re-, sub-, super-, un- and under- and not already listed in the dictionary.

The parts of speech and stress patterns of these words are shown; their meanings can be easily derived by referring to the numbered prefix entry, and if necessary to the word to which the prefix has been attached.

Abbreviations used in the dictionary

The abbreviations, shown here in italic type, will also be found in the dictionary in roman type.

Many of the abbreviations are used as labels. Other, unabbreviated, labels are also found in the dictionary, all of which should be self-explanatory. It should be noted that the label Bible, unless it is qualified, refers to the Authorized Version.

A

A[1] or a ā, n the first letter in the modern English alphabet as in the Roman, etc (see aleph and alpha); a musical note, the major sixth of the scale of C; something or someone of first class or order, or of a class arbitrarily designated A; one of the four blood types in the ABO blood group system; the designation of the principal series of paper sizes, ranging from A0 (841 × 1189 mm) to A10 (26 × 37 mm); in road-classification, followed by a number, the designation of a major or trunk road, as A68; as a medieval Roman numeral A = 50 or 500, and $\bar{A}$ = 5000. — A1 (ā wun) the symbol for a first-class vessel in Lloyd's Register of Shipping; hence first-rate or excellent; A'-road a principal or trunk road; A'-side (recorded music) the side of a single which holds the principal track being marketed. — from A to B from one point or place to another; from A to Z from beginning to end; right through.

A[2] ä or ə, (dialect) pronoun a monophthongized form of I.

atlas[2] at'ləs, (obs) n a satin manufactured in the East. [Ar]

atlatl at'ə-āt-əl or at'l-at-l, n a Native American throwing-stick; an ancient Mexican spear-thrower. [Nahuatl, spear-thrower]

ATM abbrev: anti-tank missile; asynchronous transfer mode (comput); automated (or automatic) teller machine.

atm. abbrev: atmosphere (unit of pressure); atmospheric.

atman ät'mən, (Hinduism) n the divine within the self, the essential self. [Sans ātman self, soul]

atmology at-mol'ə-ji, (phys) n the science of the phenomena of aqueous vapour. — n atmol'ogist. [Gr atmos vapour, and logos discourse] atmolysis at-mol'i-sis, (phys and chem) n a method of separating mixed gases by their different rates of passage through a porous septum. — vt at'molyse or -yze (-līz). [Gr atmos vapour, and lysis loosing, from lyein to loose]

atmometer at-mom'i-tər, (phys and bot) n an instrument for measuring the rate of evaporation from a moist surface. [Gr atmos vapour, and metron measure] atmosphere at'məs-fēr, n the gaseous envelope that surrounds the earth or any of the celestial bodies; any gaseous medium; a unit of atmospheric pressure equal to the pressure exerted by a column of mercury 760 millimetres in height at 0°C, practically the same as standard atmosphere (see under standard); a feeling of space and distance in a picture; any surrounding influence or pervading feeling (fig). — adj atmospher'ic (-fer'ik) or atmospher'ical of or depending on the atmosphere; having a perceptible atmosphere (eg of a place, music, etc). — adv atmospher'ically. — n pl atmospher'ics noises interfering with radio reception, due to electric disturbances in the ether. — atmospheric engine an early variety of steam engine in which the steam is admitted only to the underside of the piston; atmospheric hammer a hammer driven by compressed air; atmospheric pollution harmful concentrations of gases and aerosols in the atmosphere; atmospheric pressure the pressure exerted by the atmosphere at the surface of the earth due to the weight of the air. [Gr atmos vapour, and sphaira a sphere]

at. no. or at. numb. abbrev: atomic number.

atoc. See atok.

atocia a-tō'shi-ə, (zool) n (rare) sterility in a female. — n atoke (at'ōk) the sexless part in certain polychaete worms. — adj atokous (at'ək-əs) or at'okal without offspring. [Gr atokiā, from a- (privative), and tokos birth, offspring]

atok or atoc a-tok', n a species of skunk. [Peruv] atoke, etc. See atocia.

atoll at'ol or ə-tol', n a coral island consisting of a circular belt of coral enclosing a central lagoon. [Name in Maldive Islands]

atom at'əm, n the smallest particle in an element which can take part in a chemical reaction, consisting of a nucleus and one or more orbiting electrons (chem); a hypothetical particle of matter so small as to be incapable of further division, according to atomic philosophy (qv); anything very small. — adj atomic (ə-tom'ik) relating to atoms; obtained by means of atomic fission, as atomic energy or atomic power; driven by atomic power, as atomic aircraft-carrier, icebreaker, merchantman, submarine, etc; heated by atomic power, as atomic radiator. — adj atom'ical. — n atomicity (at-əm-is'i-ti; chem) the state or fact of being composed of atoms; the number of atoms in a molecule; valency. — n at'omism the doctrine that atoms arranged themselves into the universe; atomic philosophy; the atomic theory; a theory that mental processes and psychological states can be analysed into simple elements (psychol). — n at'omist a person who believes in atomism. — adj atomis'tic. — adv atomist'ically. — n atomizā'tion or -s- the reduction of liquids to the form of spray; reduction into small units, splintering, fragmentation. — vt at'omize or -ise to reduce to atoms; to reduce (a liquid or solid) to a fine spray or minute particles; to destroy by atomic weapons. — n atomī'zer or -s- an instrument for discharging liquids in a fine spray. — n at'omy (archaic) an atom, or mote; a pygmy (Shakesp). — atom (or atomic) bomb a bomb in which the nuclei of uranium or plutonium atoms bombarded by neutrons split with explosive transformation of part of their mass into energy; atomic clock a clock in which, to achieve greater accuracy, the oscillations of a quartz crystal (see quartz clock) are regulated by the vibration of certain atoms such as a caesium atom; atomic energy nuclear energy; atomic mass unit $\frac{1}{12}$ of the mass of an atom of C-12; atomic number the number of units of charge of positive electricity on the nucleus of an atom of an element; atomic philosophy a system of philosophy enunciated by Democritus, which taught that the ultimate constituents of all things are indivisible particles, differing in form and in their relations to each other; atomic pile a device for the controlled release of nuclear energy, eg a lattice of small rods of natural uranium embedded in a mass of pure graphite which serves to slow down neutrons; atomic power, atomic radiator see atomic above; atomic second a time interval whose measurement uses the frequency of radiation emitted or absorbed during transition from one energy state to another of a chosen atom; atomic theory the hypothesis that all atoms of the same element are alike and that a compound is formed by union of atoms of different elements in some simple ratio; atomic time time whose unit is the atomic second; atomic transmutation the change of one type of atom to another as a result of a nuclear reaction; atomic warfare warfare using atomic weapons; atomic weight relative atomic mass (qv); a'tom-smasher (colloq) an apparatus for breaking up the atom, an accelerator. — Atomic Energy Authority and Atomic Energy Commission the respective bodies in Britain and the USA responsible for the development and control of atomic energy; primeval atom a hypothetical dense conglomerate from whose explosion 60 thousand million years ago the universe was (according to one theory) gradually formed. [Gr atomos, from a- (privative), and tomos, verbal adj of temnein to cut] atomy[1] at'əm-i, (Shakesp) n a skeleton or walking skeleton. [Formerly also atamy and natomy, for anatomy, mistakenly divided an atomy] atomy[2]. See under atom.

atonal, etc. See atony.

atone (or obs attone) ə-tōn', adv (obs) at one, at once, together. — vi orig to make at one, to reconcile (obs); to give satisfaction or make reparation (for); to make up for deficiencies; to agree, be in accordance (Shakesp). — vt to appease, to expiate; to harmonize, or reconcile (obs). — n atone'ment the act of atoning; expiation; reparations; the reconciliation of God and man by means of the incarnation and death of Christ (Christian theol); reconciliation (obs). — n aton'er. — adv aton'ingly. — attonce (ə-tons') or attones (ə-tōnz'; both Spenser) at once; together. [at one]

atony at'ən-i, n lack of muscle tone, energy or strength, debility (med); lack of stress or accent (prosody). — adj

atonal (ā-tō'nl, or a-; music) not referred to any scale or tonic. — n atō'nalism. — n atō'nalist. — n atonality (at-ə-nal'i-ti). — adj atonic (a-ton'ik) without tone (prosody); unaccented (prosody); (of a muscle) relaxed, lacking tone (med); debilitated (med). — n atonic'ity (-is') atony. [Gr atoniā, from a- (privative), and tonos tone, strength] atop ə-top', adv on or at the top. — prep on top of. [a-[1] and top[1]]

atopy at'ə-pi, or ā', (med) n hypersensitivity with an inherited tendency to acute allergic reaction, but without predisposition to any particular type of allergic reaction. — adj atopic (-top'). [Gr atopia strangeness, from a- (privative), and topos place]

à tort et à travers a tor ā a tra-ver, (Fr) at random; à toute force (a tōōt fors; Fr) by all means, absolutely; à tout hasard (a tōō a-zär; Fr) at all hazards; à tout prix (a tōō prē; Fr) at any price; à tout propos (a tōō prō-pō; Fr) on every occasion.

ATP abbrev: adenosine triphosphate; advanced turboprop; Automatic Train Protection.

atrabilious at-rə-bil'yəs, (archaic) adj of a melancholy temperament; hypochondriac; splenetic, acrimonious. [L āter, ātra black, and bīlis gall, bile] atracurium a-trə-kū'ri-əm, n a muscle-relaxing drug used in surgery.

atrament a'trə-ment, (archaic) n blacking; ink; any black fluid, such as that emitted by the octopus. — adj atrament'al or atrament'ous. [From L ātrāmentum ink, from āter black] à travers a tra-ver, (Fr) across, through.

bimbo bim'bō, (slang, usu contemptuous) n a person, now usu a woman, esp one who is young and physically very attractive but dim, naive or superficial; a youngster: — pl bim'bos. — n bimbette' (slang) a particularly dim, etc female bimbo. [Ital, child] bimestrial bī-mes'tri-əl, adj of two months' duration. [L bimestris, from bi-, and mēnsis a month] bimetallic bī-mi-tal'ik, adj composed of, or using, two metals; (of a monetary system) in which gold and silver are used in fixed relative values. — n bimetallism (bī-met'əl-izm) such a system. — n and adj bimet'allist. — bimetallic strip a strip formed by bonding two metals one of which expands more than the other, so that it bends with change of temperature, used in thermostatic switches, etc.

bimillenary bī-mil'in-ər-i, n a period of two thousand years; a two thousandth anniversary. — Also adj. [bi-] bimillennium bī-mil-en'i-əm, n. Same as bimillenary: — pl bimillen'iums or bimillen'ia. [bi-] bimodal bī-mō'dəl, (statistics) adj having two modes. — n bimodal'ity. [bi- and mode] bimolecular bī-mə-lek'ū-lər, (chem) adj involving two molecules. [bi- and molecule] bimonthly bī-munth'li, adj or adv (happening, etc) once in two months; (happening, etc) twice a month. [bi- and month]

bin[1] bin, n a container for rubbish; a container for storing or displaying goods; a stand or case with compartments in which to store bottled wine in a wine-cellar; the wine contained in it; short for loon'y-bin, a lunatic asylum (slang); gaol (slang); a pocket (slang). — vt to put (eg bottled wine) into a bin; to throw into a waste bin; to reject, discard: — pr p binn'ing; pa t and pa p binned. — bin'-bag (colloq) a bin-liner; bin card a record card detailing the stock level in a storage bin; bin'-liner a usu plastic bag for lining a rubbish bin or dustbin; bin'man a dustman. [OE binn a manger] bin[2] bin, (Shakesp) used for be and been.

bin-. See bi-.

binary bī'nər-i, adj composed of or relating to two; twofold; expressed in binary notation; relating to two terms (math, logic); describing the two-way division of British higher education into universities and the other institutions. — n binary notation; a binary star. — binary code (comput) the encoding of information as a unique set of bits, eg characters as ASCII; binary coded decimal (comput) a decimal number written in binary code in groups of four bits, with each group representing a single digit of the decimal number (also abbrev as BCD); binary digit (comput, telecomm) either of the two digits 0 and 1; the smallest unit of information (usu in short form bit[2]); binary fission (biol) the division of an organism or cell into two parts; binary form (music) a form of a movement founded on two themes; binary notation a system of numerical notation using the base 2 (instead of 10 as in the decimal system) in which numbers are expressed using only the binary digits; binary number a number expressed in binary notation; binary pulsar (astron) a system consisting of a pulsar and a small companion star rotating round each other; binary star (astron) a double star revolving about its common centre of gravity; binary system a system using binary notation; binary weapon, munition, etc a bomb or shell loaded with two separate canisters of non-toxic chemicals, the chemicals combining at the time of firing to produce a lethal compound. [L bīnārius, from compound bīnī two by two] binate bī'nāt, (bot) adj growing in pairs; double; consisting of two leaflets. [New L bīnātus, from L bīnī two by two] binaural bīn-ö'rəl, adj having, employing, or relating to two ears; (of sound reproduction) using two sound channels. — adv binaur'ally. — binaural effect the ability to tell the direction from which a sound is coming, as a result of the different arrival times of the sound at a person's two ears. [bin- (under bi-)]

Binca® bing'kə, n an open-weave canvas fabric used for embroidery, etc.

bind bīnd, vt to tie or fasten together; to pass or put something round; to restrain; to fix; to sew a border on; to bandage or tie (up); to fasten the sections together and put a cover on (a book); to impose an obligation on; to oblige by oath or promise; to contract as an apprentice; to hold or cement firmly; to cause (dry ingredients) to cohere by adding a small amount of liquid (cookery); (of frost) to make (the earth) stiff and hard; to constipate; to bore (old-fashioned slang). — vi to become bound; to chafe, restrict free movement; to complain (old-fashioned slang): — pa t and pa p bound (bownd). — n a tie (music); a difficult or annoying situation, a bore (slang); the indurated clay between layers of coal; capacity, measure (Scot); a stem of the hop or other twiner. — n bind'er a person who binds (books, sheaves, etc); anything that binds, such as a rope, a bandage, a cementing agent, a tie-beam, a header in masonry, or a case or file for binding loose papers in; an attachment to a reaping-machine for tying the bundles of grain cut and thrown off; a reaping-machine provided with such an attachment. — n bind'ery a workplace where books are bound. — adj bind'ing restraining; obligatory; (of specific foods, etc) likely to cause constipation. — n the act of someone who binds; anything that binds; the covering of a book. — binder twine twine used in a binder; bind'weed any of various weeds that trail along the ground and twine themselves around other plants, trees, etc (esp one of the genus Convolvulus); also (black bindweed) a species of Polygonum. — be bound up in to be wholly devoted to or occupied with; be bound up with to be intimately or indissolubly connected with; bind over to subject to legal constraint (esp not to disturb the peace); I'll be bound I'll bet, I'm certain. See also bound[1] and bounden. [OE bindan; cf Ger binden, Sans badhnōti he binds] bindi-eye bin'di-ī, n an Australian herbaceous plant, esp of the genus Calotis, with burr-like fruits. [Aboriginal] bine bīn, n the flexible stem of a climbing plant; the stem of the hop. [Orig dialect form of bind] binervate bī-nûrv'āt, adj with two ribs or nerves. [bi- and nerve] bing[1] bing, (dialect) n a heap or pile (esp of waste from a coal-mine); a bin. [ON bingr] bing[2] bing, (obs slang; Scott) vi to go. [Perh Gipsy]

binge binj or binzh, (colloq) n a bout of overindulgence, esp in eating and drinking. — vi to overindulge in this way. — n bin'ger. [Perh from dialect binge to soak]

Binghi bing'gi, n (also without cap; Austr slang, usu derog) an Aboriginal; the archetypal Aboriginal. [Aboriginal, brother] bingle bing'gl, n a hairstyle midway between bob and shingle. — Also vt.

bingo[1] bing'gō, n a familiar name for brandy. [Prob B, for brandy, and stingo]

bingo[2] bing'gō, n a game in which numbers are called at random which may then be covered on players' cards, prizes being won by the first to cover all or certain of the numbers displayed on a card (cf housey-housey under house, lotto under lottery, tombola). — interj the exclamation made by the first player to finish in this game; an exclamation expressing a sudden discovery, unexpectedness, etc: — pl bing'os. — bingo hall. [Origin uncertain] bingy bin'ji (Austr colloq) n the stomach. [Aboriginal] bink bingk, (Scot) n a bench, a bank, a shelf; a plate-rack; a wasps' or bees' nest. [Northern form of bench]

binnacle bin'ə-kl, (naut) n the casing in which a ship's compass is kept. [Formerly bittacle, from Port bitācola, from L habitāculum a dwelling-place, from habitāre to dwell]

binocle bin'o-kl or -ə-kl, n a telescope for use with both eyes at once, binoculars. [Ety as for binocular] binocular bī- or bi-nok'ū-lər, n (usu binoculars) a binocular telescope; a binocular microscope. — adj with two eyes; suitable for use with two eyes; stereoscopic. — adv binoc'ularly. [L bīnī two by two, and oculus an eye]

binomial bī-nōm'i-əl, adj consisting of two terms, as $a + b$ (math); another term for binominal. — n a binomial expression; the two-part Linnaean name of an animal or plant. — binomial distribution (statistics) the probability distribution of the total number of specified outcomes in a predetermined number of independent trials, each having a constant probability of outcome; binomial theorem Newton's theorem giving any power of a binomial. [L binōmius] binominal bī-nom'in-əl, adj making use of two names, as the Linnaean nomenclature which names every species by giving first the generic and then the specific name. [L binōmin-, from bi- two- and nomin- name] bint bint, (slang, usu derog) n a girl, woman, girlfriend. [Ar, daughter] binturong bin'tū-rong, n a SE Asian prehensile-tailed carnivore, related to the civet. [Malay] bio bī'ō (pl bī'os) or biog bī'og or -og', n short forms of biography.

bio- bī-ō-, combining form signifying: life; living organisms; life or living organisms in relation to their biological environment; living tissue, as in eg the following. — n bioassay (bī-ō-ə-sā' or -as'ā) the assessment of the strength and effect of a drug or other substance by testing it on a living organism and comparing the results with the known results of another drug, etc. — n sing bioastronaut'ics the science dealing with the effects of travel in space on living organisms. — n bioavailabil'ity the extent to which a drug, etc, after administration (eg by mouth), is available to the tissue it is intended to act on. — adj bioavail'able. — adj biobibliograph'ical dealing with the life and writings of someone. — n bi'oblast (Gr blastos germ) a hypothetical unit of living matter; a minute granule in protoplasm. — n biocat'alyst a substance, eg an enzyme, that produces or speeds up a biochemical reaction. — adj and n biochem'ical. — adv biochem'ically. — n biochem'ist. — n biochem'istry the chemistry of living things, physiological chemistry. — adj biocidal (-sīd') killing living material, pesticidal. — n bi'ocide. — n bioclimatol'ogy another name for biometeorology. — n biocoenology (bī-ō-sēn-ol'ə-ji) the study of biocoenoses. — n biocoenosis (bī-ō-sēn-ō'sis; Gr koinos common) an association of organisms ecologically interdependent: — pl biocoenoses (-nō'sēz). — adj biocoenotic (-not'ik) ecological. — n bioconver'sion the conversion of organic matter into usable energy, now esp by means of biological processes. — n pl biodā'ta (esp US and Anglo-Ind) biographical information, curriculum or curricula vitae. — adj biodegrād'able (of substances) able to be broken down by bacteria. — n biodegradā'tion (also biodeteriorā'tion). — adj biodestruct'ible biodegradable. — n biodiver'sity the diversity of the natural world, ecological variety and richness. — adj biodynam'ic dealing with the activities of living organisms; (of a system of land cultivation) fertilizing with organic materials only. — n sing biodynam'ics. — n bioecol'ogy the branch of ecology dealing with the interrelationship of living organisms and the environment. — n bioelectric'ity electrical phenomena in plants and animals. — n bioelectrother'apy a form of physical therapy in which low energy electric current is applied to the skin through a pad or membrane. — n sing bioenerget'ics the biology of energy relationships in living organisms or energy changes produced by them; Reichian therapy. — n bioengineer'. — n bioengineer'ing see biological engineering under biology. — n sing bioeth'ics the study of the ethical problems produced by medical and biological research, etc. — n biofeed'back a technique for learning control of autonomic body functions in response to monitoring by electronic instruments such as an electrocardiograph. — n bioflā'vonoid (also called citrin) a vitamin that regulates the permeability of the capillary walls, found in citrus fruit, blackcurrants and rose-hips. — n bi'ogas domestic or commercial gas obtained by bioconversion. — n bi'ogen (-jen; Gr genos race, offspring) a hypothetical unit of protoplasm. — n biogen'esis (Gr genesis production) the derivation of living things from living things only; biogeny. — adj biogenet'ic or biogen'ic relating to biogens, biogeny, or biogenesis. — adj biogenous (-oj') parasitic; biogenic. — n biog'eny the course of organic evolution or development of living organisms. — adj biogeochem'ical. — n biogeochem'istry the science of plants and animals in relation to chemicals in the soil. — n biogeog'rapher. — adj biogeograph'ical. — n biogeog'raphy the geographical distribution of plants and animals. — n bi'ograph (Gr graphein to write) a biography; a bioscope. — vt (colloq) to write a biography of. — n biohaz'ard a danger of disease or pollution from living organisms, encountered eg during biological research. — n bioluminesc'ence the emission of light by living organisms, such as certain insects, marine animals, bacteria, fungi. — adj bioluminesc'ent. — n biolysis (bī-ol'i-sis) the disintegration of organic matter under the influence of bacteria. — n biomagnet'ics a type of magnetic therapy in which small magnets are placed on acupuncture points. — n bi'omass the quantity or weight of living material (animals, plants, etc) in a unit of area; living material as a source of energy. — n biomatē'rial suitable synthetic material from which to produce artificial body parts that are to be in direct contact with living tissue. — n biomathemati'cian. — n sing biomathemat'ics mathematics as applied to the biological sciences. — n bi'ome an extensive ecological community, usu with a dominant vegetation. — n sing biomechan'ics the mechanics of movements in living creatures. — adj biomed'ical of or relating to both biology and medicine; applied to the study of the effects of stress, esp space travel, on living organisms. — n biomed'icine. — adj biometeorolog'ical. — n biometeorol'ogy the effect of weather and climate on plants, animals and man. — adj biomet'ric. — n biometrician (-trish'ən). — n biom'etry (Gr metron measure) the statistical or quantitative study of biology (also n sing biomet'rics). — n bi'omining (min ext) same as microbiological mining (see under microbe). — n bi'omorph (Gr morphē form) a representation of a living thing as decoration. — adj biomorph'ic. — adj bionom'ic. — n sing bionom'ics (Gr nomos law) the study of the relations between the organism and its environment, ecology. — n bi'oparent a biological parent, not a step-parent or guardian. — n biophor or biophore (bī'ō-fōr; Gr phoros, carrying) Weismann's hypothetical unit of living matter. — adj biophys'ical. — n biophys'icist. — n sing biophys'ics a form of biology dealing with biological structures and processes in terms of physics. — n bi'oplasm (Gr plasma form) protoplasm. — adj bioplas'mic. — n bi'oplast (Gr plastos moulded) a minute portion of protoplasm. — n biopoiesis (-poi-ēs'is) the creation of living from non-living material as an evolutionary process. — adj biopsycholog'ical. — n biopsychol'ogy the branch of psychology, or of biology, which deals with the interaction of mind and body, and the effects of this interaction. — n sing biorhyth'mics the study of biorhythms. — n pl bi'orhythms physiological, emotional and intellectual rhythms or cycles, supposed to cause variations in mood or performance. — n biosat'ellite an artificial satellite containing living organisms to be studied during flight. — n biosci'ence any one of the biological sciences. — adj bioscientif'ic. — n biosci'entist. — n bi'oscope (Gr skopeein to look at) a cinematographic apparatus or theatre; a cinema (SAfr); the cinema (SAfr colloq). — n bi'osensor a living organism used to detect the presence of chemicals. — n bi'osphere the part of the earth and its atmosphere in which living things are found. — adj biospher'ic. — adj biostā'ble not affected by the biological environment. — adj biostratigraph'ic or biostratigraph'ical. — n biostratig'raphy the stratigraphy of sedimentary rocks. — n biosyn'thesis the production of complex molecules by a living organism. — adj biosynthet'ic. — adj biosystemat'ic. — n sing biosystemat'ics the study of relationships of organisms and of laws of classification. — n bi'ōta the flora and fauna of a region. — adj biotechnolog'ical. — n biotechnol'ogist. — n biotechnol'ogy the utilization of living organisms (eg bacteria) in industry, etc, eg in the creation of energy, destruction of waste, and the manufacture of various products; ergonomics (NAm). — n bioturba'tion the disturbance of the soil by living organisms. — n bi'otype within a species, a distinct sub-group. — biochemical oxygen demand a measure of the amount of oxygen required by micro-organisms in a volume of water, used as a guide to the state of pollution of the water; biogenetic law the theory of recapitulation of the history of the race in the development of the individual. [Gr bios life]

biog. See bio.

biography bī-og'rə-fi, n a written account or history of the life of an individual; such accounts collectively; the art of writing such accounts. — n biographee' the subject of biography. — n biog'rapher a person who writes biography. — adj biograph'ic or biograph'ical. — adv biograph'ically. [bio- and Gr graphein to write] biohazard. See under bio-.

biol. abbrev: biology.

biology bī-ol'ə-ji, n the science of living things; the life sciences collectively, including botany, anatomy and physiology, zoology, etc. — adj biological (-loj') of or relating to biology; physiological; produced by physiological means; effected by living organisms or by enzymes; (of washing powder, etc) using enzymes to clean clothes. — adv biolog'ically. — n biol'ogist. — biological clock an in-built mechanism which regulates the physiological rhythms and cycles of living organisms; biological control a method of reducing the numbers of a pest (plant, animal or parasite) by introducing or encouraging one of its enemies; biological engineering the provision of (electrical, electronic, etc) aids for bodily functions, eg artificial limbs and joints, hearing aids, etc (also bioengineering); the engineering required in biosynthesis of animal and plant products, eg for fermentation processes (also bioengineering); the manipulation of living cells so as to promote their growth in a desired way; biological warfare methods of warfare involving the use of disease bacteria or toxic substances. [bio- and -logy] bioluminescence ... to ... biomorphic. See under bio-.

bionic bī-on'ik, adj relating to or using bionics; superhuman, esp with parts of the body replaced with electronic devices (colloq). — n sing bion'ics the study of methods of working of living creatures and the application of the principles observed to the design of computers and other machines; (loosely) the replacement of parts of the body by electronic or mechanical devices, such as powered limbs, heart valves, etc. [bio- and (electr)onic] bionomic(s). See under bio-.

biont bī'ont, n a living organism. — adj bion'tic. — combining form -biont signifying an organism belonging to a specified habitat or environment. — adj combining form -bion'tic. [Gr bios life, and ōn (stem ont-) from einai to be] biopic bī'ō-pik, n a film, usu an uncritically admiring one, telling the life-story of a celebrity. [*bio*graphical *pic*ture]

biopsy bī'op-si, n the surgical removal of tissue or fluid from a living body for diagnostic examination; such examination. [Fr biopsie, from Gr bios life, and opsis sight]

BIOS bī'os (comput) abbrev: Basic Input Output System, a program, usu stored as firmware (qv), controlling input and output operations.

-biosis -bi-ō'sis, combining form signifying a (specified) way of living. — adj combining form -biotic (-bī-ot'ik). [Gr biōsis way of life; adj biōtikos]

biotic bī-ot'tik, adj relating to living organisms. — adv biot'ically. [Gr biōtikos] biotin bī'ō-tin, n one of the members of the vitamin B complex (also known as vitamin H). [Gr biotos means of living]

biotite bī'ō-tīt, n a black or dark ferromagnesian mica. [From J B Biot (1774–1862), French physicist and astronomer] biotope bī'ōtōp, n (ecol) a region uniform in its environmental conditions and its biota.

biparous bip'ər-əs, adj producing offspring in twos; dichasial. [bi- and L parere to bring forth] bipartisan bī-pärt-i-zan, adj relating to, supported by, or consisting of members of, two parties. [bi-] bipartite bī-pärt'īt, adj divided into two parts; (of eg a document) having two corresponding parts; (of eg an agreement) affecting two parties. — n bipartition (-tish'ən) division into two parts. [L bi- two-, and partītus divided, from partīre, -īrī to divide] biped bī'ped, n an animal with two feet. — adj bī'ped or bī'pedal (bī-ped'əl or -pē'dəl) having two feet; using two feet for walking. — n biped'alism. [L bipēs, -pedis, from bi- two-, and pēs, pedis foot] bipetalous bī-pet'əl-əs, adj having two petals. [L bi- two-, and petal] biphasic bī-fā'zik, adj having two phases. [bi- and phase[1]] biphenyl bī-fē'nīl, n and adj. Same as diphenyl.

bipinnaria bī-pin-ā'ri-ə, n a starfish larva with two ciliated bands. [L bi- two-, and pinna a feather] bipinnate bī-pin'āt, (bot) adj pinnate with each pinna itself pinnate. [bi-] biplane bī'plān, n an aeroplane or glider with two sets of wings, one above the other. [L bi- two-, and plane[2]] bipod bī'pod, n a two-legged stand. [L bi- two-, and Gr pous, podos a foot] bipolar bī-pō'lər, adj having two poles, extremities or extremes (lit and fig); relating to or occurring at both North and South Poles; (of a transistor) using both positive and negative charge carriers (electronics). — n bipolar'ity. [bi-] bipropellant bī-prop-el'ənt, n rocket propellant made up of two liquids, the fuel and the oxidizer, kept separate prior to combustion. [bi-] bipyramid bī-pir'ə-mid, n a crystal form of two pyramids base to base.

biquadratic bī-kwəd-rat'ik, n a quantity twice squared, or raised to the fourth power. — biquadratic equation an equation involving the fourth, and no higher, power of the unknown quantity; biquadratic root the square root of the square root. [L bi- twice, and quadrātus squared] biquintile bi-kwin'tīl, n the aspect of planets when they are twice the fifth part of a great circle (ie 144 degrees) from each other. [L bi- twice, and quintus the fifth] biramous bī'rə-məs, adj forked, with two branches, as some crustacean limbs. [bi-]
